IAB Europe White Paper reveals trends in trading on viewable impressions across varied European markets

Stakeholders come together to deliver next stage of IAB Europe’s Brand Advertising Framework for European digital advertising industry

Brussels, 11 February 2015 – The Interactive Advertising Bureau Europe (IAB Europe) has published a White Paper on viewable impressions today as an important step in its strategy to drive brand investment into digital advertising. The White Paper aims to educate and foster confidence in this specific aspect of digital advertising trading and lays the groundwork for further reflection on recommendations for the European industry with local IABs, measurement organisations and suppliers.

Viewability is one of a range of digital metrics which are evolving rapidly and manifested differently across European markets of varied characteristics and levels of digital development. A recent Metrics and KPIs survey¹ undertaken by IAB Europe revealed that 84% of brand advertisers stated that they want to see a move towards viewable impressions rather than served impressions. The White Paper is part of the Metrics and KPIs pillar of IAB Europe’s Brand Advertising Framework².

The IAB Europe White Paper on viewable impressions brings together a range of leading industry experts³ to provide:

- an overview of the current status of viewable impressions across Europe
- the position of viewable impressions within the context of the wider metrics portfolio
- perspectives from different stakeholders groups within the digital advertising ecosystem
- key definitions and terms
- a list of technical and commercial considerations for trading
- other quality considerations

“Whilst digital ad spend has grown four-fold since IAB Europe started its AdEx Benchmark report⁴ in 2006 there are still several commonly acknowledged challenges which hold back further growth and measurement is one of these” said Karim Attia, Chairman of the IAB Europe Brand Advertising Committee and CEO, nugg.ad. “This White Paper aims to address the area of viewable impressions measurement specifically and will be followed with market consultations. During the year other initiatives such as the IAB Europe Measurement Blueprint and wider Quality topics including environment and delivery will be developed within the Brand Advertising Committee.”

“IAB Europe’s White Paper is an important step in increasing the understanding of viewable impressions and how they fit into the overall metrics landscape,” said Bjorn Kaspring, BVDW / IAB Germany member and Head of Premium Display, Interactive Media. “Clarifying definitions and terms is important to bolster digital advertising investment from brand advertisers.”

The White Paper has been officially launched with a Webinar featuring the following speakers; Anant Joshi, Director of International Business, Meetrics; Tim Jones, Europe Research Manager, Microsoft; Jon Chase, Chairman Media Agencies Council, European Association of Communications Agencies (EACA); Steve Chester, Director of Data and Industry Programmes, IAB UK; Endre Somogyi, General Manager, IAB Hungary and Stuart Wilkinson, Head of Industry Relations EMEA, comScore.

IAB Europe’s next steps are to further consult with the local IABs, measurement organisations and suppliers on the findings of this White Paper. It will also expand its focus on quality – both of delivery of digital advertising and of the digital advertising environment - during 2015.
